How did the Fund perform last year and what affected its performance?

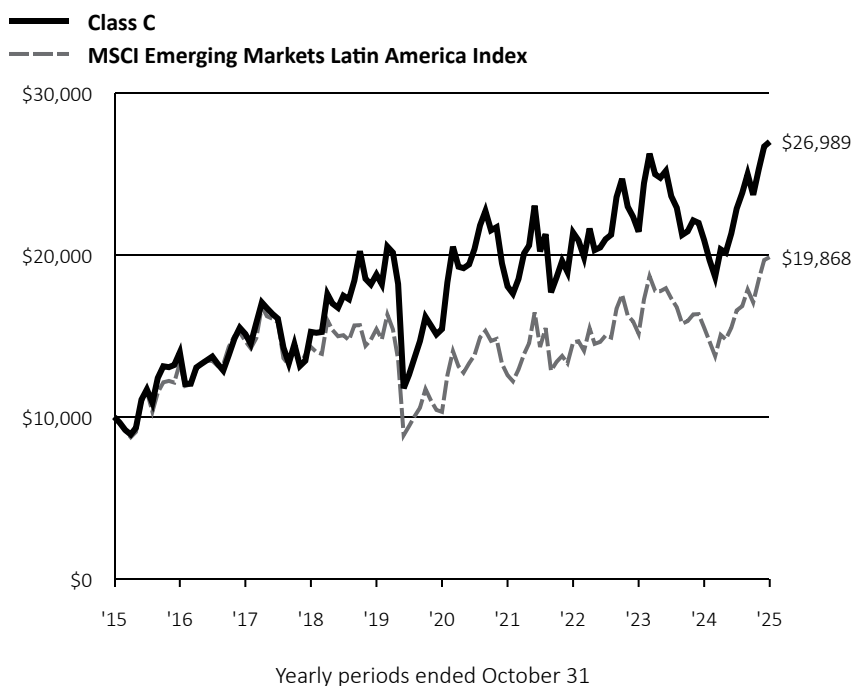

Class C shares of the Fund returned 29.09% (unadjusted for sales charges) for the period ended October 31, 2025. The MSCI Emerging Markets Latin America Index, returned 28.12% for the same period.

Against the backdrop of a strong 12 months for Latin American equities, the Fund outperformed the MSCI Emerging Markets Latin America Index by a comfortable margin. The region's equities recovered after bottoming in December of 2024, as fears subsided over fiscal discipline in Brazil and institutional stability in Mexico. Latin American markets also benefited from a weakening "US exceptionalism" narrative and declining dollar resulting from President Trump's inconsistent approach to global trade. Brazilian equities rallied as peaking monetary policy rates, attractive valuations, and optimism about a potential shift in fiscal policy with the 2026 presidential election drew foreign fund flows into the market. In Mexico, President Sheinbaum's strategic diplomacy has been broadly constructive in maintaining a positive tone in the country's relationship with the US in the lead up to next year's re-negotiation of the North American trade framework. Regional sentiment was also supported by the continued success of President Milei's reforms in Argentina.

On a country basis, the Fund's strong relative performance was primarily driven by stock selection in Brazil, followed by Mexico and Chile. In terms of sector allocation, performance benefited from an underweight to consumer staples as the Brazilian and Mexican economies slowed in the second half of the period. An overweight to utilities also proved additive as returns for the sector benefited from strong profits and attractive valuations. Positive contributions from stock selection were led by holdings within financials, consumer staples, real estate and energy. On the downside, off-benchmark exposure to Argentina and stock selection within the health care sector weighed on performance.

Stocks may decline in value. Investing in foreign securities presents certain risks, such as currency fluctuations, political and economic changes, and market risks. Emerging markets tend to be more volatile and less liquid than the markets of more mature economies, and generally have less diverse and less mature economic structures and less stable political systems than those of developed countries. Any fund that focuses in a particular segment of the market or region of the world will generally be more volatile than a fund that invests more broadly. This Fund is non-diversified and can take larger positions in fewer issues, increasing its potential risk. The Fund may lend securities to approved institutions. Please read the prospectus for details.
