This report describes changes to the Fund that occurred during the reporting period.

What were the Fund costs for the last year?

(Based on a hypothetical $10,000 investment)

	Costs of a $10,000 investment	Costs paid as a percentage of a $10,000 investment
Class R6	$93	0.86%

Gross expense ratio as of the latest prospectus: 0.97%. See prospectus for any contractual or voluntary waivers; without a waiver, costs would have been higher.

How did the Fund perform last year and what affected its performance?

Class R6 shares of the Fund returned 17.21% for the period ended June 30, 2026. The Fund's broad-based index, the S&P 500® Index, returned 22.32% for the same period, while the Fund's additional, more narrowly based index, the Bloomberg Commodity Index, returned 25.46%.

The Fund, while producing a positive absolute return in the annual period, didn’t keep pace with the Bloomberg Commodity Index.

We use a number of different strategies in an effort to maximize returns and manage risk. Among these, the Fund’s Relative Value strategy was the largest detractor from relative performance. This segment of the Fund was underweight in precious metals and overweight in energy and agriculture in the second half of 2025, which put it out of step with the prevailing market trends in this time. While the strategy’s performance improved in the first half of 2026, the recovery was insufficient to make up for the earlier shortfall.

The Fund’s Roll Enhancement strategy had a largely neutral effect. After adding value in the first three months of the period, it weakened in the fourth quarter due to the outperformance of shorter-dated contracts in this time. It lagged even more significantly in early 2026, when the start of the war in Iran led to substantial outperformance in near-term contracts versus their longer-dated counterparts. The strategy made up much of the lost ground in the final three months of the period, however, as hopes for a peace deal contributed to a normalization of market conditions.

The Fund’s Tactical Strategy detracted slightly, with almost all of the effect coming from the timing of shifts in the third quarter of 2025. The Fund had an exposure at or close to 100% for the majority of the time thereafter, allowing it to capture nearly all of the market’s positive return.

We invest in commodities using swaps and futures, and we hold the remainder of the Fund’s assets in a fixed-income portfolio as collateral. The fixed-income position helped results thanks to the contribution from yield and positive performance for holdings in corporate bonds.

We also sought to adjust the portfolio’s positioning to take advantage of short-term market dislocations in an opportunistic fashion. Our decisions in this area detracted in the aggregate.

Yearly periods ended June 30

S&P 500® Index is a capitalization weighted index of 500 stocks. The index is designed to measure performance of the broad domestic economy through changes in the aggregate market value of 500 stocks representing all major industries.

Bloomberg Commodity Index is made up of 23 exchange-traded futures on physical commodities, representing 21 commodities which are weighted to account for economic significance and market liquidity.

The Bloomberg Commodity Index is a more narrowly based index that the Advisor believes more closely aligns with the Fund's investment strategy.

Index returns do not reflect any fees or expenses and it is not possible to invest directly into an index.

The Fund invests in commodity-linked derivatives which may subject the Fund to special risks. Market price movements or regulatory and economic changes will have a significant impact on the Fund's performance. Investing in derivatives entails special risks relating to liquidity, leverage and credit that may reduce returns and/or increase volatility. Any fund that concentrates in a particular segment of the market will generally be more volatile than a fund that invests more broadly. Bond investments are subject to interest-rate, credit, liquidity and market risks to varying degrees. When interest rates rise, bond prices generally fall. Credit risk refers to the ability of an issuer to make timely payments of principal and interest. Investing in foreign securities presents certain risks, such as currency fluctuations, political and economic changes, and market risks. Emerging markets tend to be more volatile and less liquid than the markets of more mature economies, and generally have less diverse and less mature economic structures and less stable political systems than those of developed countries. A counterparty with whom the Fund does business may decline in financial health and become unable to honor its commitments, which could cause losses for the Fund. The Fund may lend securities to approved institutions. Please read the prospectus for details.
