

A tectonic shift?

For Merkel, winning reelection may have been the easy bit. Governing Germany is getting trickier.

Earlier this year, we warned strongly against reading too much into any one election. On Sunday, voters in Germany proved our point. Here are two contrasting ways on how you might view the latest election to the Bundestag from a market perspective.

To German TV viewers, it looked like a tectonic shift. Chancellor Angela Merkel's center-right Christian Democrats suffered a heavy defeat. Their Bavarian sister party, too, saw its vote crumple. All told, the Christian Democratic alliance of the Christian Democratic Union of Germany (CDU) and the Christian Social Union in Bavaria (CSU) won just 33%. Merkel's center-left coalition partner, the Social Democratic (SPD), saw its vote share shrink below 21%, to levels last seen during the early 1930s, in the dying days of the Weimar Republic. Add the surprisingly strong showing of the far-right, anti-immigration Alternative for Germany (AfD) at slightly under 13%, and it is easy to understand why many commentators should be concerned.

Look at the vote from a broader, European perspective, however, and the same results actually appear almost reassuring. The combined vote of AfD on the right and the Left (Die Linke), a far-left party, adds up to a little over 20%. That is less than parties with views comparable to those of the AfD habitually manage to get on their own in neighboring Austria, Switzerland and France, for example.

Merkel looks set to continue as chancellor, probably in coalition with the Liberals (FDP), a market-friendly and socially-liberal party, and the environmentalist Green Party. The Liberals were the second big winner of the evening, seeing their vote more than double to almost 11%. Negotiations will no doubt take time and there is no guarantee a deal can be reached. In Germany, a liberal, green and Christian democratic government is commonly known as Jamaica, after the party colors that resemble the Caribbean country's flag. Earlier this year, such a coalition came to power in the northern State Schleswig-Holstein. It remains to be seen whether such a three-party alliance will be able to effectively govern at the national level.

The main reason a Jamaica coalition looks most probable, is that it currently looks like the only outcome that is both politically and mathematically possible. Shortly after the first projection, the Social Democrats leader Martin Schulz declared that his party was not willing to participate in the next government. Should the Jamaica talks stumble, it remains to be seen whether the Social Democrats will really stick to this formula.

The coming days will no doubt be filled by plenty of speculation of how the result came about. AfD candidates have proven rather gaffe-prone, dismaying even Frauke Petry, the party's nominal leader. On Monday morning Ms. Petry announced that she will not join her party's parliamentary delegation. According to exit polls, its strong showing appears to reflect disaffection with the rest of the political system. Main drivers included homeland security, especially refugees, as well as terrorism on which AfD ran an aggressive campaign. European integration topics did not feature much in the election campaign, nor in the exit polls. This was in sharp contrast to the 2013 election, when AfD ran mainly against the euro – and narrowly failed to clear the 5% needed to enter the Bundestag.

In the light of all this, we can only reiterate that radical policy changes look unlikely, not least given the strong role of the German Bundesrat, the upper chamber of the German parliament. This result may make it a little trickier to move towards closer fiscal integration in the Eurozone as quickly as some market participants had been hoping. That could prove slightly positive for the U.S. dollar compared to the euro. German government bonds might benefit a little, on speculation about growing uncertainty. For equities, the results should be broadly neutral.

In the longer term, two things stand out. On the one hand, Germany's reassuringly boring electoral campaign has indeed resulted in more of the same, rather than any radical changes. On the other hand, sharp regional divisions remain more than a quarter century after reunification, as the electoral strength of both the Left and AfD shows. Governing Germany will by no means be a boring task.

Risk warning

Investments are subject to investment risk, including market fluctuations, regulatory change, possible delays in repayment and loss of income and principal invested. The value of investments can fall as well as rise and you might not get back the amount originally invested at any point in time.

Investments in Foreign Countries – Such investments may be in countries that prove to be politically or economically unstable. Furthermore, in the case of investments in foreign securities or other assets, any fluctuations in currency exchange rates will affect the value of the investments and any restrictions imposed to prevent capital flight may make it difficult or impossible to exchange or repatriate foreign currency.

Foreign Exchange/Currency – Such transactions involve multiple risks, including currency risk and settlement risk. Economic or financial instability, lack of timely or reliable financial information or unfavorable political or legal developments may substantially and permanently alter the conditions, terms, marketability or price of a foreign currency. Profits and losses in transactions in foreign exchange will also be affected by fluctuations in currency where there is a need to convert the product's denomination(s) to another currency. Time zone differences may cause several hours to elapse between a payment being made in one currency and an offsetting payment in another currency. Relevant movements in currencies during the settlement period may seriously erode potential profits or significantly increase any losses.

High Yield Fixed Income Securities – Investing in high yield bonds, which tend to be more volatile than investment grade fixed income securities, is speculative. These bonds are affected by interest rate changes and the creditworthiness of the issuers, and investing in high yield bonds poses additional credit risk, as well as greater risk of default.

Hedge Funds – An investment in hedge funds is speculative and involves a high degree of risk, and is suitable only for “Qualified Purchasers” as defined by the US Investment Company Act of 1940 and “Accredited Investors” as defined in Regulation D of the 1933 Securities Act. No assurance can be given that a hedge fund's investment objective will be achieved, or that investors will receive a return of all or part of their investment.

Commodities – The risk of loss in trading commodities can be substantial. The price of commodities (e.g., raw industrial materials such as gold, copper and aluminium) may be subject to substantial fluctuations over short periods of time and may be affected by unpredicted international monetary and political policies. Additionally, valuations of commodities may be susceptible to such adverse global economic, political or regulatory developments. Prospective investors must independently assess the appropriateness of an investment in commodities in light of their own financial condition and objectives. Not all affiliates or subsidiaries of Deutsche Bank Group offer commodities or commodities-related products and services.

Investment in private equity funds is speculative and involves significant risks including illiquidity, heightened potential for loss and lack of transparency. The environment for private equity investments is increasingly volatile and competitive, and an investor should only invest in the fund if the investor can withstand a total loss. In light of the fact that there are restrictions on withdrawals, transfers and redemptions, and the Funds are not registered under the securities laws of any jurisdictions, an investment in the funds will be illiquid. Investors should be prepared to bear the financial risks of their investments for an indefinite period of time.

Investment in real estate may be or become nonperforming after acquisition for a wide variety of reasons. Nonperforming real estate investment may require substantial workout negotiations and/ or restructuring.

Environmental liabilities may pose a risk such that the owner or operator of real property may become liable for the costs of removal or remediation of certain hazardous substances released on, about, under, or in its property. Additionally, to the extent real estate investments are made in foreign countries, such countries may prove to be politically or economically unstable. Finally, exposure to fluctuations in currency exchange rates may affect the value of a real estate investment.

Structured solutions are not suitable for all investors due to potential illiquidity, optionality, time to redemption, and the payoff profile of the strategy. We or our affiliates or persons associated with us or such affiliates may: maintain a long or short position in securities referred to herein, or in related futures or options, purchase or sell, make a market in, or engage in any other transaction involving such securities, and earn brokerage or other compensation. Calculations of returns on the instruments may be linked to a referenced index or interest rate. In such cases, the investments may not be suitable for persons unfamiliar with such index or interest rates, or unwilling or unable to bear the risks associated with the transaction. Products denominated in a currency, other than the investor's home currency, will be subject to changes in exchange rates, which may have an adverse effect on the value, price or income return of the products. These products may not be readily realizable investments and are not traded on any regulated market..
