

The collapse of German coalition talks

So far, the market impact has been limited, and rightly so, we would argue

Last night, Germany's Liberals (FDP) surprisingly pulled the plug on talks to form a new government. In recent weeks, key stumbling blocks included Germany's energy and immigration policies (notably whether to reinstate the right of recognized refugees for their family members to join them in Germany). These areas brought the policy differences between Chancellor Angela Merkel's centrist Christian Democratic Union (CDU), its more right-wing Bavarian sister party, the Christian Social Union (CSU), the market-friendly Liberals, and the environmentalist Green Party into sharp focus. But even in other areas, notably fiscal and broader environmentalist policy, coming to a coalition agreement was always expected to be difficult.

So far, the market impact has been limited, and rightly so, we would argue. The euro weakened slightly against the dollar, benefitting German exporters. Partly as a result, the German equity market was broadly flat overall. At the sector level, German carmakers and utility stocks rose on relief that the Greens are now less likely join the government and push for more strident measures on climate change.

These modest movements are in line with our view that not all that much changed overnight. After all, Germany's post-war constitution was explicitly drafted to ensure the country remains governable no matter what. In particular, it provides powerful incentives for parliamentary parties to try to find a consensus, while creating formidable obstacles to snap elections to the Bundestag, the lower house of the German parliament. Through the strong role of the Bundesrat, the upper house of the German government, it also frequently forces the government to look for support beyond its coalition ranks.

As acting Chancellor, Angela Merkel will remain in power, for now. In coming days, she will probably try to convince the center-left Social Democratic Party (SPD), still its partner in the current, acting government, to start talks on a new coalition agreement. Leading Social Democrats figures have repeatedly and energetically ruled this out. However, the Social Democrats may come under enormous pressure in coming days to change their mind. Depending on the public reaction, the Liberals might also decide to come back to the negotiation table.

Failing that, Article 63 of the German constitution leaves two potential outcomes. The arguably more likely one is a minority government. Under this scenario, Christian Democrats and Christian Socials would nominate a candidate for Chancellor, probably Ms. Merkel. If Ms. Merkel cannot secure majority backing in the Bundestag, the Bundestag has 14 days to vote for another candidate. After that, Ms. Merkel could be elected by a simple plurality. In that case, it is up to Germany's President to either accept the formation of the new – minority – government or to dissolve parliament.

We think it is unlikely that in such a scenario, President Frank-Walter Steinmeier would actually dissolve parliament, which would trigger new elections to the Bundestag within 60 days. And, once elected, a new minority administration might actually prove rather more stable than a multi-party coalition. The reason is that under Germany's constitution, the opposition can only oust a Chancellor with a "constructive vote of no confidence". This means Germany's fragmented opposition would need to align on an alternative candidate first.

In Germany, forming such a minority administration following an indecisive election would be unprecedented. In the short term, it might also raise some eyebrows among its European allies in Brussels and potentially cause some market ripples. In principle, however, we think it could well prove sustainable and result in a continuation of the status quo. Big, and necessary, reforms, notably to Germany's pension and educational systems, would be unlikely in coming years. But with Germany's economy firing out of all cylinders, it might take a while for markets to fret about that.

Risk warning

Investments are subject to investment risk, including market fluctuations, regulatory change, possible delays in repayment and loss of income and principal invested. The value of investments can fall as well as rise and you might not get back the amount originally invested at any point in time.

Investments in Foreign Countries – Such investments may be in countries that prove to be politically or economically unstable. Furthermore, in the case of investments in foreign securities or other assets, any fluctuations in currency exchange rates will affect the value of the investments and any restrictions imposed to prevent capital flight may make it difficult or impossible to exchange or repatriate foreign currency.

Foreign Exchange/Currency – Such transactions involve multiple risks, including currency risk and settlement risk. Economic or financial instability, lack of timely or reliable financial information or unfavorable political or legal developments may substantially and permanently alter the conditions, terms, marketability or price of a foreign currency. Profits and losses in transactions in foreign exchange will also be affected by fluctuations in currency where there is a need to convert the product's denomination(s) to another currency. Time zone differences may cause several hours to elapse between a payment being made in one currency and an offsetting payment in another currency. Relevant movements in currencies during the settlement period may seriously erode potential profits or significantly increase any losses.

High Yield Fixed Income Securities – Investing in high yield bonds, which tend to be more volatile than investment grade fixed income securities, is speculative. These bonds are affected by interest rate changes and the creditworthiness of the issuers, and investing in high yield bonds poses additional credit risk, as well as greater risk of default.

Hedge Funds – An investment in hedge funds is speculative and involves a high degree of risk, and is suitable only for “Qualified Purchasers” as defined by the US Investment Company Act of 1940 and “Accredited Investors” as defined in Regulation D of the 1933 Securities Act. No assurance can be given that a hedge fund's investment objective will be achieved, or that investors will receive a return of all or part of their investment.

Commodities – The risk of loss in trading commodities can be substantial. The price of commodities (e.g., raw industrial materials such as gold, copper and aluminium) may be subject to substantial fluctuations over short periods of time and may be affected by unpredicted international monetary and political policies. Additionally, valuations of commodities may be susceptible to such adverse global economic, political or regulatory developments. Prospective investors must independently assess the appropriateness of an investment in commodities in light of their own financial condition and objectives. Not all affiliates or subsidiaries of Deutsche Bank Group offer commodities or commodities-related products and services.

Investment in private equity funds is speculative and involves significant risks including illiquidity, heightened potential for loss and lack of transparency. The environment for private equity investments is increasingly volatile and competitive, and an investor should only invest in the fund if the investor can withstand a total loss. In light of the fact that there are restrictions on withdrawals, transfers and redemptions, and the Funds are not registered under the securities laws of any jurisdictions, an investment in the funds will be illiquid. Investors should be prepared to bear the financial risks of their investments for an indefinite period of time.

Investment in real estate may be or become nonperforming after acquisition for a wide variety of reasons. Nonperforming real estate investment may require substantial workout negotiations and/ or restructuring.

Environmental liabilities may pose a risk such that the owner or operator of real property may become liable for the costs of removal or remediation of certain hazardous substances released on, about, under, or in its property. Additionally, to the extent real estate investments are made in foreign countries, such countries may prove to be politically or economically unstable. Finally, exposure to fluctuations in currency exchange rates may affect the value of a real estate investment.

Structured solutions are not suitable for all investors due to potential illiquidity, optionality, time to redemption, and the payoff profile of the strategy. We or our affiliates or persons associated with us or such affiliates may: maintain a long or short position in securities referred to herein, or in related futures or options, purchase or sell, make a market in, or engage in any other transaction involving such securities, and earn brokerage or other compensation. Calculations of returns on the instruments may be linked to a referenced index or interest rate. In such cases, the investments may not be suitable for persons unfamiliar with such index or interest rates, or unwilling or unable to bear the risks associated with the transaction. Products denominated in a currency, other than the investor's home currency, will be subject to changes in exchange rates, which may have an adverse effect on the value, price or income return of the products. These products may not be readily realizable investments and are not traded on any regulated market..
