A surprise, Italian style

Once again, Italian opinion polls have proven unreliable

Sometimes, financial markets prove to be more efficient than you give them credit for. Take the muted reaction to Italy's parliamentary elections. By any reasonable standard, Italian voters have delivered quite a surprise. The anti-establishment Five Star Movement emerged as the largest party, as expected, with about 32% of the vote and looks set to capture at least a similar share of seats at the time of writing. That's far more than most observers had forecasted. It's a similar story for the far-right Lega. At about 18% of the vote share, Lega looks certain to emerge as the biggest parliamentary force in Silvio Berlusconi's center-right coalition. The populist gains came mainly at the expense of pretty much everyone else, including both Berlusconi's center-right Forza Italia (14%) and Matteo Renzi's center-left Democratic Party (19%). What, if any, government will emerge from these results remains anybody's guess, probably until well after all the votes have been counted and all seats have been declared. (A more or less final tally is expected at some point today, probably in the course of the afternoon.)

Taken together, Five Star and Lega have outperformed unadjusted polling averages by about 9%. In any other country, that would be very unusual. In Italy, it was just another polling error roughly in line with recent experience, as we previously argued "An Italian muddle".

From a broader market perspective, the calm among investors so far is both reassuring and a touch worrying. The euro weakened only slightly against the dollar. Perhaps, this was because the Italian elections coincided with positive news that Germany will – finally – get a new government, again under Angela Merkel. After much nail-biting, Germany's Social Democrats voted with a surprisingly strong two-thirds majority to once again become junior partners in another grand coalition.

In equity markets, there were some declines in Asia overnight. This probably had more to do with fears over U.S. protectionism than Italian politics becoming even more fragmented. European market reactions were rather muted with only Italy showing signs of volatility, after having outperformed global markets since the start of the year. As for domestic demand, Italy's economic momentum continues to look strong. We expect Italian earnings growth to be well above Eurozone averages, but continued political uncertainty could increase downside risks.

In bond markets, we have seen moderate spread widening of Italian sovereign bonds compared to German bunds. Italian corporate bonds are likely to reverse some of their gains ahead of the elections. But, while we may continue to see some volatility, as election results continue to trickle in, we would not expect a dramatic and lasting reaction.

In a nutshell

- Taken together, Five Star Movement and Lega Nord have outperformed unadjusted polling averages by about 9%
- The populist gains came mainly at the expense of both the center-left and center-right party
- What, if any, government will emerge from these results remains anybody's guess, probably until well after the final results

Italy, after all, did not suddenly become ungovernable – the elections merely reinforce previous trends. Nor was it ever especially likely that the new government would enact the sorts of reforms Italy continues to urgently need.

Take a step back, however, and there are risks both in the short and in the longer term. Much of the Five Star and Lega personnel are fairly new to the national political scene, which could create headline risks in coming days and weeks. The election results also reinforce longer-term worries. As in Italy's 2016 constitutional referendum, broadly centrist and euro-friendly forces have suffered another stunning defeat. That will make it no easier to reach a European consensus on measures eventually needed for the common currency and the European Union as a whole to function effectively.

Risk warning

Investments are subject to investment risk, including market fluctuations, regulatory change, possible delays in repayment and loss of income and principal invested. The value of investments can fall as well as rise and you might not get back the amount originally invested at any point in time.

Investments in Foreign Countries – Such investments may be in countries that prove to be politically or economically unstable. Furthermore, in the case of investments in foreign securities or other assets, any fluctuations in currency exchange rates will affect the value of the investments and any restrictions imposed to prevent capital flight may make it difficult or impossible to exchange or repatriate foreign currency.

Foreign Exchange/Currency – Such transactions involve multiple risks, including currency risk and settlement risk. Economic or financial instability, lack of timely or reliable financial information or unfavorable political or legal developments may substantially and permanently alter the conditions, terms, marketability or price of a foreign currency. Profits and losses in transactions in foreign exchange will also be affected by fluctuations in currency where there is a need to convert the product's denomination(s) to another currency. Time zone differences may cause several hours to elapse between a payment being made in one currency and an offsetting payment in another currency. Relevant movements in currencies during the settlement period may seriously erode potential profits or significantly increase any losses.

High Yield Fixed Income Securities – Investing in high yield bonds, which tend to be more volatile than investment grade fixed income securities, is speculative. These bonds are affected by interest rate changes and the creditworthiness of the issuers, and investing in high yield bonds poses additional credit risk, as well as greater risk of default.

Hedge Funds – An investment in hedge funds is speculative and involves a high degree of risk, and is suitable only for “Qualified Purchasers” as defined by the US Investment Company Act of 1940 and “Accredited Investors” as defined in Regulation D of the 1933 Securities Act. No assurance can be given that a hedge fund's investment objective will be achieved, or that investors will receive a return of all or part of their investment.

Commodities – The risk of loss in trading commodities can be substantial. The price of commodities (e.g., raw industrial materials such as gold, copper and aluminium) may be subject to substantial fluctuations over short periods of time and may be affected by unpredicted international monetary and political policies. Additionally, valuations of commodities may be susceptible to such adverse global economic, political or regulatory developments. Prospective investors must independently assess the appropriateness of an investment in commodities in light of their own financial condition and objectives. Not all affiliates or subsidiaries of Deutsche Bank Group offer commodities or commodities-related products and services.

Investment in private equity funds is speculative and involves significant risks including illiquidity, heightened potential for loss and lack of transparency. The environment for private equity investments is increasingly volatile and competitive, and an investor should only invest in the fund if the investor can withstand a total loss. In light of the fact that there are restrictions on withdrawals, transfers and redemptions, and the Funds are not registered under the securities laws of any jurisdictions, an investment in the funds will be illiquid. Investors should be prepared to bear the financial risks of their investments for an indefinite period of time.

Investment in real estate may be or become nonperforming after acquisition for a wide variety of reasons. Nonperforming real estate investment may require substantial workout negotiations and/ or restructuring.

Environmental liabilities may pose a risk such that the owner or operator of real property may become liable for the costs of removal or remediation of certain hazardous substances released on, about, under, or in its property. Additionally, to the extent real estate investments are made in foreign countries, such countries may prove to be politically or economically unstable. Finally, exposure to fluctuations in currency exchange rates may affect the value of a real estate investment.

Structured solutions are not suitable for all investors due to potential illiquidity, optionality, time to redemption, and the payoff profile of the strategy. We or our affiliates or persons associated with us or such affiliates may: maintain a long or short position in securities referred to herein, or in related futures or options, purchase or sell, make a market in, or engage in any other transaction involving such securities, and earn brokerage or other compensation. Calculations of returns on the instruments may be linked to a referenced index or interest rate. In such cases, the investments may not be suitable for persons unfamiliar with such index or interest rates, or unwilling or unable to bear the risks associated with the transaction. Products denominated in a currency, other than the investor's home currency, will be subject to changes in exchange rates, which may have an adverse effect on the value, price or income return of the products. These products may not be readily realizable investments and are not traded on any regulated market..
