

With "victories" like this...

Theresa May has survived a leadership challenge. For markets, alas, this changes very little.

When it comes to amateur dramatics, the Westminster parliament is hard to beat. As a day of political drama, December 12 was exceptional. Markets, however, mostly treated the day as a non-event. The pound pounced up and down a little, ending the day roughly where it had been Tuesday afternoon. And in terms of market reactions, that was pretty much it. Which is understandable enough, if you think through what actually happened and what it might mean for Brexit.

With "victories" like this...

In normal times, yesterday's events would have been a stunning and most probably fatal rebuke for any prime minister. Theresa May "won" a vote of confidence by 200 to 117 votes among her conservative-parliamentary-party colleagues. In order to do so, she had to pretty much promise that she will not lead her party into the next election. That deprives her of patronage, a major source of power in the British context. It effectively turns Theresa May into a lame duck – and a gravely wounded one at that.

Among Theresa May's "supporters" were plenty of members of her own cabinet lukewarm, and at times openly skeptical on the terms of the withdrawal agreement from the European Union (EU). The deal has painstakingly been negotiated between the UK and its European partners over 18 months. It has taken only a few weeks, to fall apart under parliamentary scrutiny. Passing anything close to the current deal in parliament always looked hard. In the light of recent events, it is now open to question whether its final version will even be endorsed by the full cabinet. That will depend on May's ability to secure further concessions, notable on the backstop arrangement to avoid border checks for Northern Ireland. However, Britain's European partners have already signaled quite unambiguously they are unwilling to move much.

Silver linings

During prime ministers question time on Wednesday, veteran Tory MP Ken Clarke rhetorically asked: "Can the Prime Minister think of anything more unhelpful, irrelevant and irresponsible than for the Conservative Party to embark on weeks of a Conservative leadership election?" Actually, there might have been: waiting a few more weeks before pulling this sort of stunt. The vote helpfully clarified the size of the Tory contingent adamantly determined to bring about a hard, or as they might prefer a clean Brexit. Such a cliff-edge Brexit, come March 29, would, in our view, be economically ruinous. However, political disasters can happen – and it still might, if "British brinkmanship paired with political chaos" were to run up against "legalistic, intransigent and increasingly impatient European partners", as we previously put it.¹

This worst-case scenario may have become somewhat less likely. At 117, the number of Tory-rebels group is large enough to continue stirring up plenty of turmoil, but too small to dictate government policy any longer. Theresa May cannot be challenged as Tory leader for the next twelve months. She could, of course, face a vote of confidence in the House of Commons at any time. Take those two facts together, and she will probably continue to avoid a no-deal, cliff-edge Brexit at all costs.

In her response to Mr. Clarke, May pointed to the January 21 deadline for parliament to vote on her deal and claimed that because of the tight timeline: "The new leader - were a new leader to come in - one of the first things they would have to do would be to either extend Article 50 or rescind Article 50, and that would mean either delaying or stopping Brexit."²

It would be ironic, though no longer totally unthinkable, if May ended up doing either of those things herself to stave off disaster. According to a recent ruling by the European Court of Justice (ECJ), Britain has the unilateral right to reverse its Brexit decision, by revoking its Article 50 letter. By contrast, extending the deadline would require the agreement of all other member states. Of course, neither of those options currently ranks highly among Theresa May's potential choices. In coming weeks, her priority is likely to be to seek whatever further concessions she can get from Britain's European partners. If that proves insufficient to regain support within her own party, as now seems likely, she will reach out to the opposition. Various alternative deals, modelled on the arrangements the EU has with other countries such as Canada, Switzerland and Norway will all be mooted. So will a second referendum. None of these possible alternative solutions, however, is likely to be readily available by March 29. Trade deals are complicated matters and tend to require lengthy negotiations, even if you use an existing framework, similar to Norway's. Referenda too require some preparation. And in the meantime, markets might have little reason to panic, but no reason to stop worrying about Brexit either.

Risk warning

Investments are subject to investment risk, including market fluctuations, regulatory change, possible delays in repayment and loss of income and principal invested. The value of investments can fall as well as rise and you might not get back the amount originally invested at any point in time.

Investments in Foreign Countries – Such investments may be in countries that prove to be politically or economically unstable. Furthermore, in the case of investments in foreign securities or other assets, any fluctuations in currency exchange rates will affect the value of the investments and any restrictions imposed to prevent capital flight may make it difficult or impossible to exchange or repatriate foreign currency.

Foreign Exchange/Currency – Such transactions involve multiple risks, including currency risk and settlement risk. Economic or financial instability, lack of timely or reliable financial information or unfavorable political or legal developments may substantially and permanently alter the conditions, terms, marketability or price of a foreign currency. Profits and losses in transactions in foreign exchange will also be affected by fluctuations in currency where there is a need to convert the product's denomination(s) to another currency. Time zone differences may cause several hours to elapse between a payment being made in one currency and an offsetting payment in another currency. Relevant movements in currencies during the settlement period may seriously erode potential profits or significantly increase any losses.

High Yield Fixed Income Securities – Investing in high yield bonds, which tend to be more volatile than investment grade fixed income securities, is speculative. These bonds are affected by interest rate changes and the creditworthiness of the issuers, and investing in high yield bonds poses additional credit risk, as well as greater risk of default.

Hedge Funds – An investment in hedge funds is speculative and involves a high degree of risk, and is suitable only for “Qualified Purchasers” as defined by the US Investment Company Act of 1940 and “Accredited Investors” as defined in Regulation D of the 1933 Securities Act. No assurance can be given that a hedge fund's investment objective will be achieved, or that investors will receive a return of all or part of their investment.

Commodities – The risk of loss in trading commodities can be substantial. The price of commodities (e.g., raw industrial materials such as gold, copper and aluminium) may be subject to substantial fluctuations over short periods of time and may be affected by unpredicted international monetary and political policies. Additionally, valuations of commodities may be susceptible to such adverse global economic, political or regulatory developments. Prospective investors must independently assess the appropriateness of an investment in commodities in light of their own financial condition and objectives. Not all affiliates or subsidiaries of Deutsche Bank Group offer commodities or commodities-related products and services.

Investment in private equity funds is speculative and involves significant risks including illiquidity, heightened potential for loss and lack of transparency. The environment for private equity investments is increasingly volatile and competitive, and an investor should only invest in the fund if the investor can withstand a total loss. In light of the fact that there are restrictions on withdrawals, transfers and redemptions, and the Funds are not registered under the securities laws of any jurisdictions, an investment in the funds will be illiquid. Investors should be prepared to bear the financial risks of their investments for an indefinite period of time.

Investment in real estate may be or become nonperforming after acquisition for a wide variety of reasons. Nonperforming real estate investment may require substantial workout negotiations and/ or restructuring.

Environmental liabilities may pose a risk such that the owner or operator of real property may become liable for the costs of removal or remediation of certain hazardous substances released on, about, under, or in its property. Additionally, to the extent real estate investments are made in foreign countries, such countries may prove to be politically or economically unstable. Finally, exposure to fluctuations in currency exchange rates may affect the value of a real estate investment.

Structured solutions are not suitable for all investors due to potential illiquidity, optionality, time to redemption, and the payoff profile of the strategy. Calculations of returns on the instruments may be linked to a referenced index or interest rate. In such cases, the investments may not be suitable for persons unfamiliar with such index or interest rates, or unwilling or unable to bear the risks associated with the transaction. Products denominated in a currency, other than the investor's home currency, will be subject to changes in exchange rates, which may have an adverse effect on the value, price or income return of the products. These products may not be readily realizable investments and are not traded on any regulated market.
